

Regenerative Medicine: Frequently Asked Questions

- What type of conditions is Regenerative Medicine used to treat?

Peachtree Orthopedics uses Regenerative Medicine (also referred to as Orthobiologics) to treat a spectrum of orthopedic problems including arthritis, ligament or cartilage injuries, tendonitis, inflammation, muscle tears, and fractures.

- Does my health insurance cover these procedures?

Commercial insurance companies deem Regenerative Medicine procedures as elective and still somewhat experimental or investigational and therefore do not cover the procedures.

- Are these procedures safe?

Yes, all Regenerative Medicine procedures conducted by Peachtree Orthopedics are safe. Patient safety is a top priority for the Regenerative Medicine program. Peachtree Orthopedics uses evidence-based medicine and science-based discovery treatment options for a range of diagnoses. Patient outcomes are researched to stay updated on patient progress.

- How do I know if I'm a candidate for the Regenerative Medicine Program?

A consultation with one of our Regenerative Medicine physicians will provide answers for the best treatment option for you. Peachtree Orthopedic surgeons and physician led teams will lead you through a thorough examination to determine the best treatment for you.

- Can these treatments worsen my condition?

This is highly unlikely. Research indicates that cortisone injections can degrade tissue, whereas regenerative medicine treatments can strengthen tissue. While some discomfort after a treatment may occur, this should resolve within a week. Risks of injectable treatments include bleeding, tissue injury, pain, infection and lack of response.

- Can I use a regenerative medicine treatment during surgery?

Yes, it is possible that having a regenerative medicine treatment in conjunction with surgery can improve your overall outcome.

- How much do these procedures cost?

Peachtree Orthopedics offers a spectrum of Regenerative Medicine options. Our financial counselors will assist you in the discussion of pricing. Please contact us at (404)355-0743 x1332 for pricing information.
